Intestinal Indigestion

A Form of Dyspepsia Usually Resulting From the Inability to Digest Starchy Foods.

There are a great many persons who are victims of what is known as intestinal indigestion, a disease which is due to the fact that the starchy foods are either partially digested or not digested at all, and the result of this trouble may be either an obstinate constipation or a persistent diarrhoea. This inability to digest starchy foods is called "amylose dyspepsia." A diet which is much in evidence. Americans are notoriously poor digesters of starchy foods, and the result of this is a chronic indigestion, which is not entirely in the small intestine, and not in the stomach proper, as is generally supposed. It can be readily seen how intestinal indigestion will usually produce diarrhoea.

In the small intestine the pancreatic juice acts upon the starches and ordinarily, in a state of health, possesses the power of converting them into grape sugar, which is absorbed. Starch must be so transformed before it can be of use to the animal being. Remaining unchanged starch, it either passes through the alimentary canal and proves a useless burden to the system, because it resists absorption, or it causes intestinal indigestion, the food products becoming acid, through putrefaction, which often sets up a catarrhal inflammation of the intestine, resulting in diarrhoea.

In a complaint of this character many persons use purgatives, cathartics, and tannin to relieve the diarrhoea, but the alimentary canal must be so transformed before it can be of use to the animal being. Remaining unchanged starch, it either passes through the alimentary canal and proves a useless burden to the system, because it resists absorption, or it causes intestinal indigestion, the food products becoming acid, through putrefaction, which often sets up a catarrhal inflammation of the intestine, resulting in diarrhoea.

Not only are the starches digested by the use of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, but through the action of other ingredients they contain albuminous foods like meat and eggs are also digested. Thus they cure indigestion of any kind. Buy a package from your druggist today for 50 cents and send us your name and address for free sample package. Address P. A.
